Fourth Sunday in Ordinary Time January 29, 2023 Year A

The beatitudes can be found in the first section of what is regarded as the Sermon on the Mount. The beatitudes are regarded by some scholars as the Magna Carta of the Christian life. In the beatitudes, Jesus outlines the attitudes and characteristics of a true disciple. They also serve as an encouragement for those who are suffering as they follow this path of discipleship. They represent a reversal of values and a change of the world's standards for happiness.

In the first beatitude, Jesus regards the poor in spirit as being blessed. The poor in spirit are not those who are materially poor, but those who recognize their need for God. They will share in the kingdom of God regardless of their poverty. In the second beatitude, Jesus praises those who grieve over the wickedness that afflicts others or causes them suffering. In the third beatitude, the meek and lowly are those who wait patiently on the Lord in the midst of their afflictions. They do not respond in anger against those who offend them.

One of the most remarkable beatitudes in Matthew's account is the final one. In this beatitude, Jesus calls blessed those who endure persecution for the sake of righteousness. This is what the martyrs endured. They were persecuted on account of the Word or the Faith.

How do we respond when we are persecuted on account of the faith? Like the disciples and apostles, we should anticipate similar persecutions. Our reward definitely outweighs our sufferings. Though our sufferings and persecutions are temporary, our reward is eternal.

Based in part on the commentary, The Gospel of Matthew, by Curtis Mitch and Edward Siri.
